VERANSTALTUNGEN

State (Re)construction and Art in Central and Eastern Europe 1918–2018

The conference aims to explore geo-cultural characteristics of the Continent's eastern part. Discussion topics shall include the concepts of national art and idioms of pro-state artistic attitudes after 1918 as well as artistic activities that contest political regimes and systems at large. We shall look into the essence and role of identity models constructed in the cultural sphere against changing socio-political configurations. In East-Central Europe the period of political and economic transformation following the fall of Berlin Wall was marked by a drive for integration with the European Union on the one hand, and renewed interest in the paradigms of regional, national and local identity on the other. Various milieus throughout the region have embraced the idea of returning to the traditions lost or discarded in the times of nineteenth century imperialism, Cold War or as a result of contemporaneous globalisation.

The conference shall also attempt to diagnose the processes of reinterpreting old and generating new narrations, national and local, in the context of transnationalism and evolving notions on state cultural policies in the interwar and Cold War times as well as over quarter of a century that has passed since the collapse of the Iron Curtain. The conference's main conceptual axes are: identity – dependency – relationalism. The terms shall be applied to the main discourses outlining the region's specificity in interwar decades, post-1945 and post-1989 periods. The problem of identity encompasses the forming of new national states in post-World War I Europe, and includes the official idiom of state-sponsored art of the 1920s and 1930s. The concept of imagined identity can be explored with reference to the official art and culture of the period as well as in the context of modernisation and development projects applied to modern society. The theme of self-identification is also related to cosmopolitanism and transnationalism, provoking questions about preferred cultural patterns and avant-garde amalgams, thus looking at regional particularism in the context of artistic creativity at large. The concept of dependency has largely determined the political formation of Central and Eastern Europe during and after World War II. With temporal and regional variations, dependency histories were based on diverse artistic models, from "national form" to universal idiom of modernity, filtered through the local tradition as well as international cultural paradigms. Finally, the relational perspective, the strongest in the context of post-communist transformation, explores the region's fluid identity against the expanding and changing European Union structures, as well as complex, nomadic geo-cultural policies, determined by the processes of globalisation and homogenisation of culture and their specific, regional dimension.

The reshaping of the political map in the twentieth century, and the migratory movements and political pressures in the twenty-first century instigated deep change in the social climate, with state-related emancipation processes and changing cultural models stretching between tradition and avant-garde. The conference aims to show the place of art in complex socio-political processes, pose questions about how art shaped and perpetuated or reconfigured the social imagery, and even expanded beyond its ever-shifting boundaries. The key point of discussion shall be the specificity of East-Central Europe (as allegedly formed between 1918 and 2018), and its cultural and artistic identifiers against the region's socio-economic landscape and political mapping.

We invite representatives of various humanities: theory and history of art and architecture, cultural and literary studies, philosophy, sociology, anthropology, gender studies, film, theatre and media studies. We would especially welcome papers in the following areas:

- Art in state (re)construction: Art and national/cultural identity in the interwar period; Art in the service of state authority in the interwar period; Art and legitimisation of communist rule: propaganda, instrumentalisation, manipulation; Post-communist "nostalgia": fashionable design or aesthetic and/or ideological redefinition?
- Art in contesting of the political system: Art versus state authority in the interwar period; Art in political activities of the emigrant communities in Cold War time; Art in contesting legitimacy of the state from 1945 onwards.
- Methodological questions: Comparative studies of art in Central and Eastern European states; Post-colonialism, post-totalitarianism or post-dependency?
- Perspectives in studying East-Central European cultures;

Globalism vs. regionalism: contexts of interpreting art in Central and Eastern Europe; Histories of art history and art criticism in East-Central Europe; Is there a cultural/artistic specificity to Central and Eastern Europe?
